

Recruiting Table Kit

Most clubs gain the majority of a year's members in about two weeks. Prepare for those.

What to bring

- [] Sign-up sheet — name and email only. Nothing else. Do not collect phone numbers, student ID numbers, weight, or "goals" at a table in public
- [] A pen that works, and a spare
- [] One-page handout: what the club is, when it meets, where, and how to join
- [] QR code to the club's page or sign-up form
- [] Something to sit behind and something to put it on, if the venue does not provide it
- [] Two officers minimum, so the table is never unattended

What to say

A tabling pitch is two sentences, then a question. Long pitches lose people.

"We're the bodybuilding and fitness club — we train together, run posing and prep sessions, and you don't have to compete to join. Do you lift already, or are you looking to start?"

Both answers are good answers. The second one is the person most clubs accidentally scare off, and the one most likely to still be a member in three years.

What not to do

- Do not comment on anyone's body. Not as a compliment, not as encouragement, not ever
- Do not promise coaching, results, timelines, or that competing is easy
- Do not give nutrition advice at the table
- Do not imply NCBO runs a season or competition that does not yet exist
- Do not photograph people without asking

Follow-up

- [] Email everyone who signed up within 48 hours, while they remember signing
- [] First email says exactly one thing: the next meeting, time and place
- [] Anyone who attends once gets a second, personal message. That is the step that converts
- [] Keep the sign-up list only as long as you need it, then delete it

NCBO club template. Your university's own sport club policy governs your club; where it differs from this template, follow your school. NCBO does not certify, insure or supervise any club.